Zika virus is a member of the virus family Flaviviridae and the genus Flavivirus, transmitted by daytime active Aedes mosquitoes, such as A. aegypti and A. albopictus. Its name comes from the Zika Forest of Uganda, where the virus was first isolated in 1947. The most common symptoms of Zika are fever, rash, joint pain, conjunctivitis, muscle pain and headache. There is a strong evidence of link between the Zika virus and a birth defect called 'microcephaly' in which babies are born with undersized brain and skulls. The Zika virus is transmitted by daytime-active mosquitoes as its vector. As of September 2016, many reported cases indicate that Zika virus could possibly be sexually transmitted. Women in El Salvador and Colombia are being cautioned to avoid pregnancy due to the potentially dangerous Zika virus. Currently, there is no vaccine to prevent Zika virus disease. Prevention against mosquito bites and avoids travel to countries affected by Zika virus and avoids unprotective sex is the best form of protection.

Pottery shaped like a Roman mosaic was discovered in the same area during excavations in 2012, and had an even worse fate than the rest. The fragments were left to rot, with many missing pieces and pieces of pottery in the shape of pottery, a common result of a lack of care when working on the museum.

Since early 2015, researchers have been working to get the fragments, which have been called "pot-shaped" in archaeological language, back together. The artifacts from Pompeii include a variety of pottery — including some that may have been made in the fifth century B.C..

The fragments found in Egypt have the shape of a Roman mosaic, as well as some mosaic-like fragments, and some of that shape can be found in Pompeii—although these fragments are most commonly found on the eastern end of the temple in the middle part of the year.. At least one researcher, the antiquities conservator and curator of Roman artifacts, David O'Reilly, has suggested the piece—made from a pottery shape similar to Roman mosaic pottery.
